1. Replace Slo-Syn
	Present equipment is several years old and has wear throughout. The controls and capabilities no longer keep up with the state-of-the-art of the equipment today. By replacing this machine with a new CNC mill, an improved machining time, as well as a reduction in scrap, can be realized.
2. Cutter Grinder		Rotating Components	$ 15,000
	Present Grinder is several years old and has wear throughout. This grinder requires excessive setup time to try and compensate for the wear in the machine. Also, this machine does not have the capabilities of grinding many of our new tools. As a result, outside vendors are used, which causes additional delays and unnecessary down time. Based on the type of equipment that is available, this machine needs to be replaced.	Mechanical Displays
3. Mikron (Rebuild 2nd Machine)		Rotating Components	$ 15,000
	Some of these machines are over 20 years old, and as a result of daily use, they have developed wear. This is still some of the best equipment available for precision	Ordnance gear cutting. By rebuilding this equipment, it can be returned to the manufacturer's original specification for accuracy, alignment, and performance.

This machine is no longer being manufactured. We use this machine for cutting gearing on some of the gearhead products. This equipment has developed wear over the many years of production, and by rebuilding, can be returned to the manufacturer's original specifications for accuracy, alignment, and performance.

Many tool components are being fabricated in the tool room, which require numerous hours of milling time. The CNC machine will develop precision tool components with excellent repeatability, and greatly reduce the hours required to develop the tool.

Present equipment (Ling) is over 25 years old and is very difficult, if not impossible, to repair. Propose obtaining a new test system, which would feature random vibration and sinesweep. This equipment would be used for production vibration, quality testing, first article testing, design R&D, and failure analysis.
